In the pre-state society, proverbs and sayings as a genre of folklore codified the unwritten laws of social behavior. With the formation of the state and the "law of the written word", proverbs and sayings are being pushed to the periphery of social life as customary law (legal custom), an important component of the language environment of modern man. Currently, they regulate mainly intra-family life and exist in opposition to official law. The life of a person outside the home in proverbs and sayings is dedicated to the fulfillment by a person of social duties and the rules of social, social behavior. A special place here is occupied by proverbs about the role of the word in social communication. The behavior of a person in the family circle is determined by those customs that are not recorded anywhere and obviously date back to ancient times, since they are based on the very archaic right of the strong and the right of the first. In addition to general household rules, it describes the relationship of parents with children and the relationship between spouses. The third group of proverbs and sayings formulates not the norms of behavior in them, but the laws beyond the control of man.

Proverbs are a generalization of the centuries-old life experience of the people, contain an emotionally expressive assessment of human actions, events, and phenomena. With the help of units of everyday consciousness, one can join the way of thinking of the people, come closer to comprehending the originality of the national character, the national system of values. The appeal to the concept of "family" is due to the fact that it occupies a significant place in the life of an ethnic group and, as a result, receives a rich historical and cultural content. The family has become the focus of basic life values, happiness, prosperity. And at the same time, both positive and negative character traits of family members are manifested in family relations, which determine their behavior and attitude towards each other. Family and relationships in the family are quite widely represented in the proverbs of the Russian people.
